Treasury of the United States.

Washington, October 13, 1880.

Sir:

I am in receipt of your letter of the 11th instant, advising me that you has by mistake fail transfer order No. 9,600 for twenty thousand standard silver dollars to First National Bank, Memphis, Tenn.

The same amount upon the same order having been paid by the Mint at New Orleans upon telegraphic order of this office, the mistake involved double payment to the bank. Fortunately its securities, however, were sufficient to cover both amounts, and the bank is willing to keep the coin and distribute them for the Treasury.

To correct the error, I have this day caused to be issued transfer order 9,618 for the same amount on pay, and upon its receipt, properly indorsed by the express company, will thank you to counter-enter transfer order No. 9,600, and charge my account with the late orders.

All transfer orders from this office in favor of Adams Express Company are handed to the Treasury Agent at this point, and by error in this office the orders of the 6th instant was sent to the express office in Philadelphia.

Very respectfully
